WIGWAM TALKS.

Tammany Hall's Celebration of the 115th Anniversary of Independence Day.

Letters from Grover Cleveland and Other Famous Democrats.

Senator Hill Avows Loyalty to the Party.

Ringing Speeches by Congressmen Bryan, Bourke Cockran, John R. Fellows and Others.

Tammany Hall is a blaze of glory-to-day, inside and out. Flags and streamers, red, white, and blue, the bunting, Butter from every available point on the Fourth street Wigwam, and the interior is simply gorgeous with color.

Janitor Kelly and his assistants had hung the fronts of the boxes and the gallery with rich velvets in light blue, embroidered heavily in gold. Blue portières curtailed the rear windows, and there was a canopy of blue and gold over the door that leads from the rear of the platform down the apparently interminable stone staircase to the wonderful spring which flows sparkling champing as on every recurrence of the Nation's birthday.

The starry banner was very much in evidence in the hall itself, and the flags and coats of arms of the forty-five states were hung on stands around the platform of the bunting.

The platform was also festooned with blue velvet and gilt, and at the front were three more decorations. In the center of the first was a bank of roses, and with this an immense floral masterpiece, on one side the date of organization of the Tammany Society or Columbian Order—1782. The other two were the date "1892," the tenth year of American independence.

The Wigwam was filled by the general public by 5 o'clock, though the Tammany celebration of the one hundred and sixteenth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence was not to begin until 10 o'clock.

In the executive offices of Tammany Hall sat Great Chief Richard Croker, Grand Sachem Thomas E. O'Gallagher, and a few others of the leaders of the society, with the invited guests of the day.

At 6 o'clock, the "Wigwam talk" began, and the speaker was Senator Hill, who spoke for himself. A simple enumeration of the inhabitants of the State, as required by the Constitution, rather than an expensive, complicated and unnecessary recapitulation of the Senate and Assembly districts, a duty long and purposefully neglected by our opponents, soon followed, and the majority, rather than the minority, of the people will make the election.

Mr. Pendleton, commenting on the proposed amendment to the Constitution, said:

"The 'short talk' followed Congressman W. L. Wilson, of West Virginia, the eloquent Chairman of the recent Constitutional Convention, who spoke for himself, and said:

"The speaker's speech was well received, and he was invited to speak again, but he declined, and the audience gave him a hearty round of applause.

At 7 o'clock, Mr. Pendleton, of West Virginia, followed in the second of the "long talk."

Mr. Pendleton began with a tribute to General George Washington, and then denounced the system of class legislation known as the protective tariff.

By placing a tax on the products that come from abroad, they the Republicans have put extraordinary profits into the pockets of the middle classes, the consumers and the producers of our people. In less than thirty years under this system of protection, the people have increased from a thousand to a thousand millions.

"These taxes on our faith, this opposition to constitutional principles, this contempt for the rights of the people, and the right of self-government, have brought us into a condition where we are not safe from invasion, and where we are not safe from civil war.

"In the State of New York, the Democratic party has been in power for many years, and in most of the branches of the legislature it has a majority. It has always been the defender of constitutional liberty and of the reserved rights of the States. It opposes the policy of the Republicans, and demands that federal taxation should be put into private rather than private purpose; it advocates honest and straightforward taxation for the benefit of all, and gives no preference to one class over another.
